

there's still hunting and gathering and fishing going on, but it has shifted decidedly towards agriculture as your prime food resource. There's also an incredible industry going on in making tools. This is a reconstruction of what the city, the village's, houses must have looked like, and you've now shifted to sites with hundreds of residents and certain specializations of labour,

It also shows... this is a very controversial wall painting... it also shows what we think is the first depiction of a city, consciously, we.... there there's a lot of debate what this represents. This is today in the Museum of Anatolian civilizations it's a fresco from one of the houses but it seems to represent the pattern of cities here which I showed you in the isometric reconstruction in the lower level, and in the back is Hasan Dağı which is the great mountain, volcanic mountain which has fertilized the plain. It clearly is also the source of the obsidian which is turned into tools and weapons and traded across the Near East and this is in...
